

(Image: Fresh Tracks, New Snow—Winter in North America)

Tradition is not just a mere collection of works and skills; it is also a formative force which shapes perception.

When mistakes live on unawares through obsolete structures, artifacts, and modes of thought, tradition becomes a powerful block to creativity.

How unlike Nature, that allows mistakes to be washed away, to burn, to die and decompose into the rich soil which nourishes the new day.