

Has the eternally feminine deserted
the house of poetry?

Why this constricted feeling in the throat and shoulders, hair rolled too tightly in a bun . . . ?

They say: even the children no longer play outside, are no longer capable—of praise.