

Love and Place

In the present era, we abandon each other at the drop of a hat because, both individually and collectively, we deserted long ago the very earth upon which we stand.

Without a soil made rich by generations of care, even the most heartfelt feelings can find no place to root and call home.

(Photo: "Digging under Asphalt", A Neon Graffiti: N. America)